

Competition amongst residential ISPs is an essential guarantee that the FCC should be providing to me as a consumer. There is a natural monopoly in the last mile of connectivity to my home. It is the FCC's responsibility to make sure that a single business entity does not use that last mile monopoly to control what I am able to do from my home and what the cost will be. Competition is the only fair way in our democracy to insure that my freedoms are protected. Please insist on continued fair access by independent ISPs to me as vendors of my Internet services.
